Pashinyan: Referendum on the New Constitution Will Be Held After Parliamentary Elections

The referendum on adopting the new Constitution will take place after the 2026 parliamentary elections. Prime Minister Nikol Pashinyan announced on November 22 during the first conference held with representatives of state institutions.

According to Pashinyan, this will allow all political forces to share their views and positions regarding the constitutional agenda with the public during the election campaign.

“Following the elections, the position of the political majority that receives the people’s vote of confidence will be shake the feeling that citizens of Armenia often feel alienated from the legal order established in the country. Laws, regulations, and the legal framework are often perceived here as inconveniences or obstacles... This can be partly due to the decisive in shaping the final draft of the Constitution,” Pashinyan said.

He also noted the need to strengthen internal legitimacy through the new Constitution. “Because of this issue of legitimacy, we cannot occasionally poor quality of regulations and laws. But that is not the main point right now—the issue is the sense of alienation with which our society often regards the legal and state order,” Pashinyan said.

PAREV-TV interviews Hasmik Mekanejian and Seta Kantardjian

“The program will be 90 minutes long and I promise that I will keep the smiles on the audience faces from beginning to end,” said Hasmik Mekanejian, director of the traditional Christmas at the Cathedral program, scheduled for Friday, December 19, 2025. “We will have over 40 participants in this joyous program which will include Armenian music, classical music, with the participation of the Diocesan Choir, professional singers and the St Vartan Cathedral School youth.”

Seta Kantardjian, artistic director of the Shushi Dance Ensemble, is also passionately involved in this Christmas production. “For the past two years I was teaching dance to the youth at St.

Vartan Cathedral School...the participation of the youth is important as they will remember the experience on stage for the rest of their lives,” said Seta.

Hasmik expressed her appreciation to the talented organist, Ari Terjanian, who will accompany all performers.

Both Hasmik and Seta spoke highly of the support they receive from the Primate, Bishop Mesrop Parsamyan and the Diocesan staff. They both promise to deliver a joyous uplifting Christmas program.

The entire interview may be watched here.

Pope Leo XIV Visits Armenian Patriarchate in Istanbul and Offers Prayers

Pope Leo XIV held prayers at the Armenian Apostolic Cathedral in Istanbul on Sunday, in a gesture of support for Christian unity and for Christian minorities in Turkey.

According to the agency, in a cloud of incense, accompanied by a male choir chanting in the Church's ancient tradition.

Approximately 500 Armenian worshippers were in attendance as they dedication ceremony was held during which Pope Leo unveiled a marble inscription in his honor.

"The Papacy has long served as a moral compass, defending the dignity of every human being, championing peace, and giving voice to those who have none," Patriarch Sahak said. "The Armenian people do not forget the Popes who raised their voice in our times of suffering, who stood with Christian communities in danger, and who welcomed Pope Leo and Armenian Patriarch Sahak II Mashalian into the Holy Mother of God Patriarchal Church.

upheld the truth when the world hesitated."

In his remarks, the Pope expressed gratitude to God for "the courageous Christian witness of the Armenian people throughout history, often under tragic circumstances."

The Pope noted that his visit to Turkey is dedicated to the Nicene Creed, as the Church marks the 1700th anniversary of the Council of Nicaea, and he reflected on the unity that once prevailed between East and West during the early centuries of the Church's life.

Pope Leo's visit is one of several encounters in Turkey and Lebanon with Armenian Christian faithful, recognizing their deep historical roots in the region. Clearly, the Armenian presence in Istanbul is an ancient one—deeply rooted—and its significance has been evident in all the meetings held over the past several days.

British Embassy to Armenia announces 'historic' appointment of first resident Defence Attaché

The British Embassy to Armenia announced on Thursday that Major Thomas Shorland Ball has been appointed as the first British resident Defence Attaché to Armenia.

"This historic milestone reflects the growing strength of the UK–Armenia partnership and will further enhance our defence and security cooperation," the embassy said in a statement.

Dr. Yervant Zorian praises bilateral agreements enabling transfer of cutting-edge U.S. technologies to Armenia

President of Synopsys Armenia, Dr. Yervant Zorian, has highlighted the significance of the bilateral Armenia–United States agreements signed in Washington this summer, which will facilitate the export of American technologies to Armenia.

Armenpress asked Dr. Zorian to comment on the U.S. government’s approval for the AI startup Firebird Inc. to export Nvidia Corp. chips to Armenia for a 500-million-dollar supercomputer project.

Lauding the launch of the project, he said it is planned that starting from 2030, ten percent of the electricity produced in Armenia will be allocated to powering the data center.

“It is a very positive decision, without which it would have been difficult for Armenia to gain access to these technologies. The field of AI is quite advanced but still inaccessible to many countries. According to U.S. export-control regulations, Armenia was not allowed to receive new technologies in AI, microelectronics, and other fields from the United States. However, in August, the two countries signed three memorandums at the White House, one of which concerns authorization for exporting these technologies. The document outlines effective avenues of cooperation between the U.S. and Armenia in this area, which will facilitate the provision of American technologies to the Armenian side. The first step in this direction was the decision to provide Nvidia chips to Firebird. It is now very important to apply the same approach in the field of microelectronics, where different regulations apply. It is expected that the memorandum will also contribute to the export of microelectronics technologies. In that case, the headquarters of American companies—such as Synopsys—would be allowed to provide their Armenian branches with many advanced technologies that they are currently unable to transfer,” Dr. Zorian said.

Armenpress: What prospects does the implementation of this major project related to artificial intelligence open up for Armenia?

Dr. Yervant Zorian: Armenia will have a high-quality data center, which is extremely important. In its absence, many companies operating here have been forced to rely on data available in other organizations’ centers for AI computations. From now on, Armenian companies will be able to perform the necessary computations using local data rather than cloud-based data. Companies from other countries will also be able to use the data generated by the center to be established in Armenia—they will acquire space here and carry out their operations locally. The data center will contain numerous computers performing calculations simultaneously through various chips. The term “super” indicates that hundreds or even thousands of computers will work in parallel. These systems will consume large amounts of electricity, and additional capacity may be required to support this demand. This is why the participation of the Armenian state in the process is crucial. It is planned that starting from 2030, ten percent of the electricity produced in Armenia will be allocated to powering the data center.”

Firebird, an AI cloud company, and the Armenian government—with support from NVIDIA—announced in June 2025 their vision for building advanced AI infrastructure to accelerate technological innovation and establish the Caucasus region as an AI hub.

The initiative will bring the first large-scale AI data center to the region. The 100-megawatt facility—backed by an initial $500 million investment—will use AI servers from Dell Technologies Inc. and Blackwell processors from NVIDIA. The first phase is scheduled to be operational in the second quarter of next year, Firebird Chief Executive Officer and co-founder Razmig Hovaghimian told Bloomberg after the company received U.S. government approval to export NVIDIA chips to Armenia.

The advanced AI infrastructure, developed in collaboration with the Armenian government, NVIDIA, and Team, will be located in the Armenian town of Hrazdan.

Asked about Armenia’s current position on the global IT map, Dr. Yervant Zorian underscored that the country holds a strong place but emphasized the importance of focusing on key strategic directions.

“Armenia holds quite a strong position, but it should be noted that the IT sector is very broad and represented in almost every field. Smart devices are not only widely used but also interconnected. It will be difficult for Armenia to take leading positions in all areas of IT application; therefore, it is necessary to select several strategic directions and strive to gain significant positions in those specific areas. For this purpose, under the leadership of Prime Minister Nikol Pashinyan, the Science and Technology Development Council of Armenia has been formed, and five key strategic fields have been identified for our country: microelectronics, artificial intelligence, biotechnology, autonomous systems development, and quantum electronics. State involvement in this process is essential, as the development of these fields requires the creation of relevant infrastructure and the formation of an ecosystem—from education to research and the establishment of companies. This means organizing school and university education related to the sector, supporting research, promoting innovation, and launching companies that will put these ideas into practice. If even one link in this chain is missing, the overall system will not function properly. Working together in a coordinated manner is crucial for achieving high efficiency,” Dr. Zorian said.

Dr. Yervant Zorian is Synopsys Fellow and the President of Synopsys Armenia. Formerly, he was Vice President and Chief Scientist of Virage Logic, Chief Technologist at LogicVision, and a Distinguished Member of Technical Staff AT&T Bell Laboratories. He is currently the President of IEEE Test Technology Technical Council (TTTC), the founder and chair of the IEEE 1500 Standardization Working Group, the Editor-in-Chief Emeritus of the IEEE Design and Test of Computers and an Adjunct Professor at University of British Columbia.

He served on the Board of Governors of Computer Society and CEDA, was the Vice President of IEEE Computer Society, the General Chair of the 50th Design Automation Conference (DAC) and the 50th International Test Conference (ITC) as well as several other symposia and workshops.

Dr. Zorian holds more than 40 US patents, has authored four books, published over 350 refereed papers and received numerous best paper awards.

Lebanon's newly appointed ambassador presents credentials to President Khachaturyan

The newly appointed Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of Lebanon to Armenia, Dima Haddad, presented her credentials to the President of the Republic of Armenia.

President Khachaturyan congratulated the Ambassador on her appointment and expressed hope that her activities would contribute to the strengthening of relations between Armenia and Lebanon. The President praised the special historical ties and warmth between the two countries and peoples.

During the meeting, it was noted that relations between Armenia and Lebanon are based on historical friendship, cultural commonalities, and mutual respect. It was highlighted that “Lebanon is one of Armenia's important partners in the region.”

The parties discussed the possibilities of expanding bilateral cooperation in areas of common interest. The importance of investing efforts in promoting political dialogue and strengthening business ties was emphasized.

The parties also underscored the importance of political and institutional cooperation, the implementation of existing potential, and the preservation and development of intercultural and historical ties.

Lebanese Ambassador Dima Haddad, in turn, assured that she would contribute to the strengthening of bilateral ties and the promotion of new initiatives.
